THE STORY OF THE EAGLES

By ED HOGAN
Publicity Director

The history of the Philadelphia Eagles' Football Club is replete with pages of adversity and success, high hopes and near despair and yet so typical of all the clubs in the National Football League, who together, pulled professional football from its early shaky beginning all the way up the rickety ladder to its present lofty position as one of the era's greatest attractions.

Now, the game is enjoying spectacular prosperity as a crowd pleaser, setting records for attendance and money gates. And our own Eagles have been an integral part of the history since their inception in 1933. The game and the Eagles have come a long way. For example, for five home games in 1939 the Birds played before 65,462 fans. Twenty-one years later (1960) they drew a record of 286,301 for six games and 353,626 including the Championship game.

After a wait of 11 seasons, the Eagles reached the summit again in 1960 with a spectacular, almost incredible, surge to the National Football League championship, the third in the club's colorful history. And they did it the hard way, coming off the floor to win nine in a row. They were battered by Cleveland in the 1960 opener, 41-24, and then took off. They capped the brilliant season by beating Green Bay, 17-13, at Franklin Field in the championship playoff.

1947 EASTERN DIVISION CHAMPIONS

Today, as they embark on their 29th year, the Eagles have reached a high point in their success by playing their regularly scheduled National League games in the University of Pennsylvania's famed Franklin Field for the fourth straight year. The unprecedented move to Franklin Field, one of the finest football stadiums in the country, is indeed a tribute to the men who now operate Philadelphia's entry in professional football.

The Eagles today are a sound business, owned by 100 Philadelphians who have vowed to give the city a winner come what may. Financially, the club is secure. The franchise, once worth $2,500, is now valued perhaps 200 times that price.

Thanks to smart handling by men such as Jim Clark, Frank McNamee, Joe Donoghue, Vince McNally, and Harry Sylk, the Eagles have come out of the wilderness of insecurity and are firmly established with able direction from the Chairman of the Board Jim Clark, all the way through the chain of command. The present ownership is the fourth to control the flight of the Birds and by far the most successful.

Spawned during the depression, the descendants of the old Frankford Yellowjackets seldom had it easy. If the Eagles weren't fighting for the title—and it took 15 years to win it—they were struggling to survive.

Three world championships and four divisional titles have been won but they were a long time coming. In fact, the job started 29 years ago and has been handled by eight head coaches. Lawrence T. "Buck" Shaw, a pro from away back, was the eighth man to be entrusted with the Eagles' reins.

Shaw, after a three-year tenure resigned at the close of the 1960 season and his assistant of two years, Nick Skorich, was named to take over as the bossman starting the 1961 season.

Following a disastrous 1931 season, the Frankford Yellowjackets finally gave up the ghost after eight years of fighting adversity and the sheriff. The club did not play a game in 1932. Lud Wray, former Penn lineman and coach, talked his old buddy and Penn ex-teammate, the late Bert Bell and the National Football League's celebrated commissioner for 14 years, into investing some money and purchasing the Yellowjackets' franchise which was declared forfeit by league action in 1932.

Bell listened and with a few of his friends forked over the munificent sum of $2,500 for the club. That was in July, 1933, and it marked the start of Bell's great career in professional football which came to an untimely end on Franklin Field October 11, 1959, when Mr. Bell died of a heart attack watching the Eagles and the Pittsburgh Steelers in action.

In honor of the New Deal and the NRA, Mr. Bell rechristened the Yellowjackets, naming them the Eagles. Thus came into being a professional football team, born during the depression and more than once on the verge of a financial collapse. That it didn't was a credit to Bell who proved a master at cutting corners, stretching the buying power of the dollar to almost unbelievable lengths. For one span of five hectic years (1936-40) Bell was owner, coach, ticket seller and chairman of the one-man board.

More than 20,000 jammed Baker Bowl, then the home of the Phillies' National League Baseball Club, for the Eagles' first home game on October 22, 1933 with the Portsmouth, O. Spartans which the Spartans won 25-0. Baker Bowl is now a combination used car and parking lot and the Eagles' record home attendance for a league game is 71,237 vs. the Cleveland Browns at the Philadelphia Stadium in 1950. It was also in 1933, November 12 to be exact, the Eagles played the first Sunday game in this city, tying the Chicago Bears 3-3.

At the end of the first season (1933) the Eagles had won three, lost five and tied one. They won four games in 1934, lost seven and plummeted all the way to the bottom the next two years, winning only a total of three games. Players came and went during these sad years almost too fast for the fans to keep track. During this period, the Eagles switched home base to Temple Stadium and the Philadelphia Stadium.

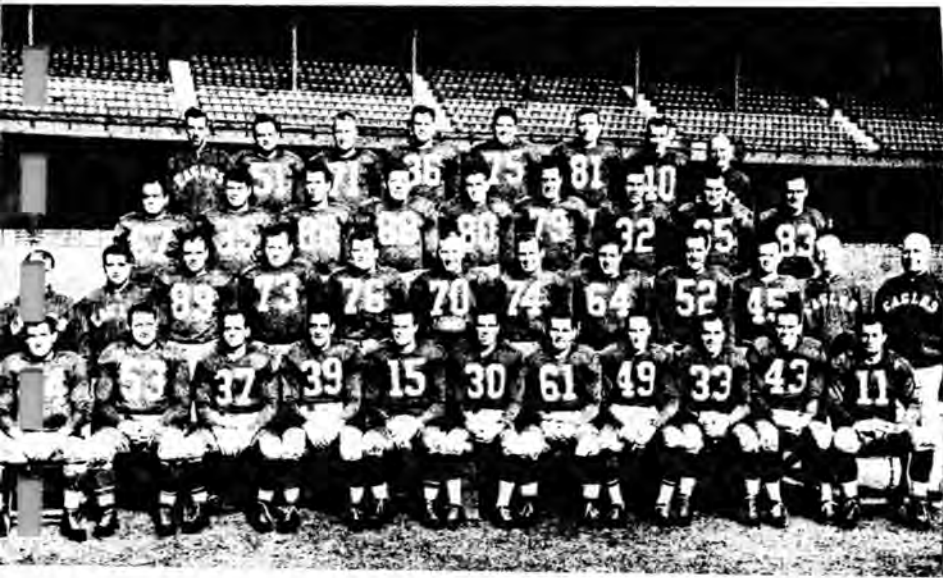

As might be expected, attendance sagged and here Mr. Bell had to reach into the inner recesses of his fertile mind to find ways and means of keeping the Club in one piece. On road trips they traveled by bus and when an open field was spotted the boys would hop out and practice. Box lunches supplied the food intake. Bell would scout around the towns looking for rooming houses. Now, the Eagles travel first class in chartered planes and eat and sleep in the finest of hotels.

When he purchased the Yellowjackets' franchise in 1933, Bell had induced a couple of friends to kick in with some fresh lettuce. The friends took it as long as they could and finally after the 1935 season, they surrendered, the team was put on the auction block and Bell became the exclusive owner with a $4,000 bid. He also became head coach, president, business manager, ticket seller, etc.

Still success eluded the hard-working, energetic Bell who, after coaching the team in the morning, would rush down to the ticket office and hope to find some buyers. He won one game in 1936 and two in 1937, scoring 117 points in the 23 games.

Came 1938 and a temporary revival. The Eagles that year won five games and the skies began to clear. They looked so good to Bell that he went all out to sign Davey O'Brien, the first of many great stars to play for the Eagles, but to get O'Brien, Bell had to guarantee the highest salary in the NFL at that time, said to be $12,000 per annum, plus a percentage of the gate.

But, Bell always considered O'Brien, Texas Christian All-American, worth every cent he paid him, even though in 1939 and 1940 he won only a total of two games. O'Brien played only these two seasons. The 1939 record was one victory, nine defeats and one tie. In 1940 it was one and ten. O'Brien was truly great, setting a passing record of 60 and 33 completions against the Washington Redskins. Davey's mark of 60 attempts still stands.

So when the 1941 season was approaching, Bell was receptive to all offers for the Eagles. Bert had formed a firm friendship with Art Rooney, that fabulous Pittsburgher who in 1940 sold controlling interest in the Pittsburgh Steelers to the New York millionaire, Alexis Thompson. Rooney then purchased from Bell a half interest in the Eagles for the 1940 season.

Thompson, who died early in 1955, liked the chances in Philadelphia better for pro football and engineered a transfer deal with Rooney and Bell. The franchises and teams were switched April 5, 1941, Philadelphia going to Pittsburgh and Pittsburgh to Philadelphia, Thompson owning the club here outright and Rooney and Bell in partnership in Pittsburgh.

Thompson immediately brought Greasy Neale down from New Haven, Conn., and the Yale environment and named him head coach of the Eagles.

Alfred Earle (Greasy) Neale was backfield coach at Yale, a former big league baseball player, a guy with a wealth of coaching background and what's more a burning yen to coach the pros. Thompson and Neale started from scratch and even with Thompson's ever-open check book success was a long time coming.

Neale scrapped the single and double wing which had been identified with him for so long and went hog-wild for the T. Even so, the Birds finished next to last in their division winning two games, losing eight and tying one in 1941. Neale had watched the Chicago Bears devastate the Redskins in the 1940 Championship playoff by a 73-0 score. He also was a spectator when Stanford, under Clark Shaughnessy, master of the T, won the Rose Bowl. Greasy took the T under his wing and added several refinements later to be copied by many other coaches.

Neale was a builder and as long as Thompson was patient, he kept building. The next year (1942) he won only two games, lost nine and wound up at the bottom of the division. In 1943, the Eagles combined with the Steelers for one season and became known as the Steagles. It was a war year. The Steagles struggled for five wins, four losses and a tie.

Now the pendulum began to swing in the Eagles' favor. Greasy became more familiar with the T and its intricacies, players started coming back out of service and the club began to gain stature.

In 1944 they wound up second in the Eastern Division, winning seven, losing only one and tying two. They also scored 267 points, highest for any Eagles team up to that time. That year also marked the debut of Steve Van Buren, destined to be one of the greatest ball carriers in the history of the National League and certainly the Eagles' brightest star.

It is noteworthy that the Eagles' fortunes started to rise with the advent of Van Buren. The club, under Neale, never afterwards finished lower than third. Along with Van Buren, Neale secured Frank Kilroy, Al Wistert, Vic Lindskog, Ernie Steele, Jack Hinkle, Larry Cabrelli, Bosh Pritchard, Vic Sears, Jack Ferrante among others and the Eagles started to climb. Quarterback

Tommy Thompson came back from service in 1945. That year the Eagles won seven, lost three and in 1946 they were victorious six times in 11 games.

Came 1947 and the first title, albeit a divisional one. By now Joe Muha, Alex Wojciechowicz, Pete Pihos, Neil Armstrong and other stars of top magnitude were carrying out orders for Creasy. The Eagles lost the 1947 title game to the Chicago Cardinals, 28-21, playing on ice-covered Comiskey Park gridiron.

Then in 1948 and 1949, they won the world title. In both seasons, Van Buren was the mighty force. He scored the only touchdown in the 1948 championship snow game against the Chicago Cardinals at Shibe Park and the next year in Los Angeles he waded through mud and torrential rain for a record 196 yards as the Eagles won, 14-0, over the Rams.

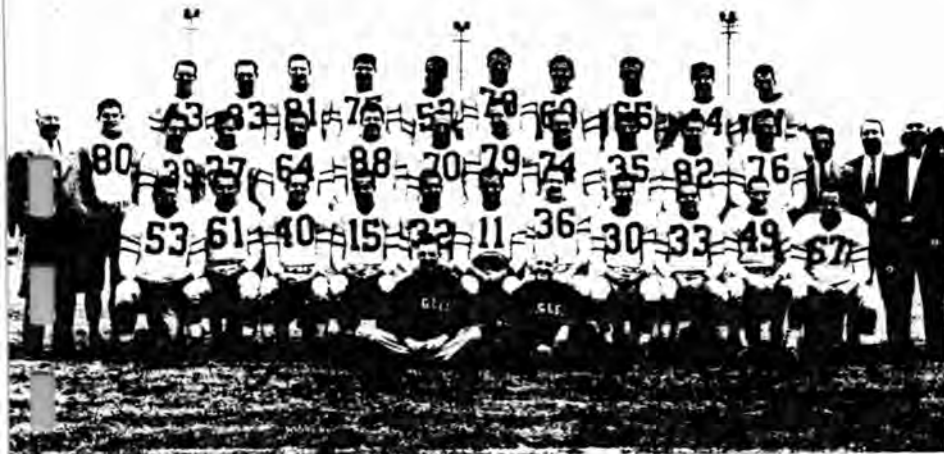

But despite its artistic successes on the gridiron, the club continued to lose money. The Eagles' payroll was one of the highest in the league and it seemed to be a case of the Eagles becoming too good for their own good. Lex Thompson's losses in 1947 and 1948 were said to approximate $80,000 but the team was giving the fans a whale of a show, scoring 308 points in 1947, 376 in 1948 and 365 in 1949. They lost only seven games in three years. A loss to the Chicago Bears was the only 1949 defeat.

After 1948, Thompson had enough and sold the franchise to a Philadelphia syndicate of 100 business men headed up by James P. Clark, trucking tycoon and well known in the city's political circles. Each of the "Century Club" purchased one share for $3,000. Thompson was paid $250,000 for the franchise and the other $50,000 was used to rehabilitate the Eagles.

The sale was consummated in January, 1949.

Neale was retained, won the title again in 1949 and slipped to third in 1950, splitting even in 12 games. Then in February, 1951, Neale was relieved of his duties and the late Alvin "Bo" McMillin was hired to replace him. Lud Wray (1933-35); Bert Bell (1936-40) and Neale (1941-50) preceded McMillin as the Eagles' flight masters. Walter Kiesling, of Pittsburgh, acted as co-coach with Greasy when their two clubs were combined in 1943.

Neale's assistants, Larry Cabrelli and Honest John Kellison, left with him. McMillin brought in Wayne Millner, a former Notre Dame All-American end, and Jim Trimble, one of Bo's "pore Indiana boys," as his aides. Millner was a former star end and coach with the Washington Redskins. Trimble had been head coach and athletic director at Wichita University.

But McMillin was not to see the Eagles beyond their second game in 1951. He was stricken the night before the league opener with the Cardinals in Chicago but refused to quit. Yet, his illness finally was too much for him and after the Eagles defeated San Francisco in the home opener, Bo retired to his home in Bloomington, Indiana, where he died early in 1952.

The club was turned over to Millner for the remainder of the 1951 season and only two more games were won making it a total of four out of 12. The team wound up fifth and the fortunes of the Eagles at that point were mighty low. Millner started the 1952 training season as headman but before the NFL campaign opened, he, too, retired because of illness. Trimble was named head coach in September of that year.

The Eagles finished second for three years under Trimble (1952, 1953 and 1954) winning seven games in each of the three seasons. They faltered again in 1955, tying for fourth, and conditions deteriorated to such an extent that a change was necessary.

Hugh Devore, of Notre Dame fame, was signed on as head coach in January, 1956. He won only seven games out of 24 in two years and was replaced by Shaw in January of 1958. Skorich succeeded Shaw.

The 1961 season will find the Eagles defending their hard won title and despite the loss of their brilliant quarterback, Norman Van Brocklin (Van Brocklin is the head coach of the new Minnesota Vikings) the outlook is bright. The club personnel will be essentially the same as the 1960 titular team with, of course, the exception of Van Brocklin.

Head coach Skorich has great confidence that Sonny Jurgensen, who stood in the wings for three years, is ready to play the leading role at QB.

Financially, too, the upsurge is continuing. The switch to Franklin Field as a home base for the 1958 season has proven quite beneficial. Last year (1960) the Eagles played to a record six-game home attendance of 286,301 for 12 regular league games and adding the 67,325 who saw the championship playoff the total rises to 353,626.

The top for a league game, (vs. New York) was 60,547, a Franklin Field record for the Eagles.

Chairman of the Board is James P. Clark, who was president from 1949 until 1952 when he resigned due to press of business, accepting the position of vice president which he retained until being named to his new post in 1958. President for the ninth straight year is Frank L. McNamee, also the Fire Commissioner for the City of Philadelphia.

Joseph A. Donoghue, popular and shrewd, is Executive Vice President and Secretary, a key man behind the scenes. Vincent A. Born: December 28, 1920

While he played for the Eagles from 1944 through 1951, Steve Van Buren was regarded as the greatest ball carrier in the history of the National Football League and he set all kinds of running records to prove it. He established six rushing records that withstood the ravages of time until Cleveland's Jimmy Brown entered the picture.

In eight active years as the scourge of Eagles' opponents, Van Buren led the league in rushing for four seasons and hit the high spot of 1,146 yards in 1949 which lasted for nine years or until Brown ground out 1,527 for the Browns in 1958. Van Buren five times was named to the All-Pro team and spear-headed the Eagles to world championships in 1948 and 1949.

From 1952 until 1955 Steve worked for the Eagles as talent scout and speech maker. He quit to go into private business. Now he has returned to the Eagles' fold and everybody's happy to have him back.
